

applaud

@applaud.you

A surgery practice switched on applaud.

No kiosk. No card at the desk. No change to how the team works.

Day 7: its first new five-star review.

Here's the week, day by day. 🧵

The first week · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

Day 1.

A patient checks in. An hour after the visit, a short text lands: how did it go?

Nobody uploaded a list. Nobody picked who gets asked. No clinical detail in the text.

The front desk didn't know it happened.

Day 1 · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

The replies came back the same day.

In their own words. Not a score out of ten. Not a form. A text back to somewhere they were an hour ago.

Over the run, two in three patients answered. 25 of 39.

Day 1 · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

Every reply is read before anyone is asked for anything.

Three bands: needs attention · happy · delighted.

Happy patients get a one-tap link to the practice's Google page.

A patient with a problem gets a private route to the practice instead.

Day 1 · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

Day 2.

Didn't post yet? One nudge.

Opening the Google box doesn't end the sequence. Opening is not posting, and people get distracted mid-review.

Day 2 · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

Day 5.

The last nudge. Then it stops.

And it stops for good the moment the review appears. Nobody gets chased after they've already said yes.

Day 5 · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

Day 7.

The first new five-star review appears on Google.

Seven days from go-live. Written by the patient, in their own words.

Day 7 · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

Every review landed within three days of that patient's first text.

The fastest: a couple of hours.

Nothing took a week of chasing.

The team? No training, no scripts, no chasing, no logging in.

The pattern · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

Day 52.

39 patients contacted. 25 replied. 12 were asked. 4 posted — every one of them five stars.

Five complaints reached the practice privately, not Google.

One practice, small numbers. Yours will differ.

Day 52 · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud

applaud

@applaud.you

Every patient gets the check-in.

A signed BAA before any patient detail.

$0 in any month where no review publishes.

See what your first week would look like → applaud.you applaud.you · a surgery practice's first weeks on applaud